This is a poem I wrote because I got into an argument with my best friend in the whole world... aka my "sister".

We haven't talked for the whole rest of the night, despite my attempts. I'm beginning to think she doesn't want to talk to me, or worse cas

1 - On This Night

On This Night
by Autumn Neko Pittman
You said I was your sister dear
Those words in me a spark ignite
And though you are still mine, I fear I'm no longer yours on this cold night.
I remember them, as clear as glass,
The days we merrily spent together
We swore, as we let sweet hours pass To tie a knot which never would tether.
Sisters we were, until one day
When I feared it would not be the same again.
Sisters
we were, til to my dismay,
An argument wore our knot so thin.
I beg your forgiveness, I beg and I plead,
As you are my sister, I cherish you so;
I know that this was my fault, but I need Someone who will understand and know What I go through, and what I feel
And someone who will always be There when my pain seems all too real And wholl open my eyes so I can see That life is not dim and there is a side Of
every bad thing that is so bright, So lets put this argument aside
And be sisters once again on this night.
You said I was your sister dear
Those words in me a spark ignite And simply, I wish and I pray to hear
I forgive you, Sister; it will be alright.
