I looked up into the clouds, the sound of the wind rushing past my ears was strangely comforting, I sighed, finally I was home. I alighted softly on a pile of rocks and silently I made my way down to the farm.

The Farm is a beautiful place, or, at least it was. It had been a place of magic, a place where Dryads, Sprites, Muses and Seraphs often came to meet; it had been so peaceful, until they came. They tore down trees and anything signifying beauty, harmony and care. Many of us were killed in the great battle, hardly any of us made it and those who did fled to the other realms. But I will not flee and I will have my revenge on those who started the war.

“How dare you come here and destroy everything that we have made for ourselves” I advanced slowly on the man crouching in the corner, my sword was dripping in his blood. “We are absolute; there is nothing you can do to destroy us” he laughed “even if you kill all of us our stain shall remain on this land forever and we will continue to return until all those that oppose us are dead.” I swung my sword quickly and killed him in one stroke, I sighed, maybe he was right, how could I defeat them all?

No. I must not think like that, I have much to do; these creatures will not die without my help. I limped slowly down the castle steps, my journey has just begun.
