Chapter 1 - Something I never thought possible

1 - Something I never thought possible

I didn't know what I was doing, going to live with my dead beat father, but I knew it was time for me to go my own way. My mom would have liked me to stay in the warm-and sometimes cold-days of Kitchener. But I knew how much my father worked. He works from Sunday-Saturday from 6:00 to 9:00 so living with him would be like living by myself. Of course I was wondering if I would get lonely and hoped the answer would be no.

"You know you don't have to do this." My mom said pulling me out of my thoughts.

"Mom!" I complained whining a little bit. "You know why I am doing this." I had said for the umpteenth time.

"Well I know why you say you are doing this, but I know how you feel about your father." She replied in a small voice.

"Mom" I said sternly. "I am going to collage soon and want to spend some time with my dad first."

"Yeah but-"

"Yeah but nothing, mom!" I snapped. "I am going to collage soon and want to spend some time with my dad first." I would never tell her the reason why I was moving because I don't want to hurt her like my brother and sister did. She doesn't deserve to be hurt like that again. So I picked the reason that was but wasn't a lie. "Mom." I said in a clipped tone. "If I feel like things aren't going so well I will come home ok?"

"Alright sweetie. Here we are have a good flight and I will see you at Christmas?" Her statement changed into a question on the last word.

"Yes mom." I said rolling my eyes. I walked around to the bed of the truck and pulled out my bag. I walked back to the passenger side and gave my mom a kiss. "Love you mom."

"Love you too baby." She answered trying to wipe a tear from her eye before I saw.

I ran to the airport and stood in line to get my boarding pass.
