A poem about one's selfish in a relationship that cause one to ache and the other being so selfish blind to it.

1. How Selfish One Can Be

Only if you knew
What it meant to say
That you are sorry
For it has always escaped you.
He wished you knew
All the pain he felt
And the sorrow that followed.
Only had you looked back
To see how the heart will fall
And the pit it goes into.
How you could never care
Whether he lived or died
He might still favor you.

When he cuts his arm
After you took his soul
All he could think of was you.
Only if you thought
The plans he had made
So you can feel had made
So you can feel how bitter
You made him.
He hopes to see
The reaper soon
And he would be far,
Far away from you.
If I knew his pain
That your selfishness caused
I would die, too.
