Here's a philosophical question for you. Can teenagers, who don't have to worry about the real problems of life, experience true love?

Chapter 1 - Too Young?

1 - Too Young?

Too Young?

I want to tell my girl

Of my burning soul

How she soothed my troubled mind

And how my heart she stole.

But I know that somewhere

Deep inside her brain,

That she'd laugh upon me

And call my love insane.

Then gain I cannot tell

With these mortal eyes

Whether my heart does truly love

Or if it tells me lies.

I lay awake at night and tell myself

“Love this cannot be.”

“I'm too young to know true love”

“Too young to a goddess see.”

Then can some one tell me why

When I am alone

The only girl I miss is her

And others turn to stone?

Either way I'll endure

And continue my attack

On her heart, the ice will part

And she will love me back.
