Another poem...

As we destroy Earth, we reach to Mars, the God of War. And he will accept us because we embody everything he is: war and destruction and a sick sense of pride.

0 - Gaia and Ares

Momma, Momma! The green's fading.
Your warm breath is done creating
Because people are always raiding
Your life that is slowly waning.

Momma, Momma! We say our byes.
You're done and gone with one last sigh,
In anger and malice, as you die,
Lash out in last violent cry.

Brother, Brother! We reach to you,
We've followed you through-and-through,
Many lives, even Momma, we slew.
Without home, where will we go to?

Brother, Brother! We're coming now.
Your red eye beneath Father's brow,
Greedily thinking just how,
Hot much influence'll we allow?

Gaia, Ares, we've used and will use:
Mother's love that's been abused
And Brother's welcome just a ruse,
Savior Ares, what's there to lose?
